victim and "Richards basically told him to keep the story between them and not call the police," Kohanek said. Instead, the victim "came straight to the police department to report what happened."

Detectives returned to the hospital to confront Richards, who then admitted he had fabricated the robbery about the story, Kohanek said. After doctors discharged Richards on Wednesday afternoon, detectives booked him into the Buena Park City Jail. He remains in custody on $50,000 bail.

The man who shot Richards will not be charged. The man acted because he feared for his safety, and "was determined to have used the weapon lawfully to protect himself," Kohanek said.
